

More air and noise pollution in urban areas as population grows.		More crime in urban areas because there are more people.
There is more competition for jobs in urban areas because there are more people.		There are more people in urban areas so there is a better social life and community spirit.
People have poorer health because less food.		More people work in the informal sector (jobs with no set hours, no set wages and no set working area) in urban areas.
Not much can be done to improve farming conditions because of drought.		More people in urban areas so pressure on water and electricity services.
There are more entertainment and leisure services in the urban areas because there are more people.		More money paid in taxes in urban areas so more to spend on services.
More people to provide homes and services for in urban areas so pressure on local authority.		More pressure on health and education services in urban areas because there are more people.
There are less workers to run services e.g. health centres and schools.		Higher density living because more people in urban areas so more stressful.	